Are you PCI Compliant?

Are you accepting payments via credit or debit cards as part of your business process? Is your card payment acceptance process PCI compliant? Are you aware of the consequences for non-compliance? Are you finding compliance to be cost-prohibitive?

The Payment Card Industry Data Security Standard (PCI DSS) is an international set of security requirements for any entity responsible for storing, processing or transmitting cardholder data, and applies to all payment channels, including retail, mail/telephone order and e-commerce. Financial penalties for non-compliance for acquiring banks can reach six figures per month and are ultimately passed down to non-compliant customers.

The ability to accept payments via credit and debit cards is increasingly critical to business success. However, during this most recent growth period for card acceptance, many large corporate clients have built in-house credit/debit card processing solutions that are not PCI compliant. This has resulted in breaches in security and compromises in data privacy that has caused not only controversy, but serious financial implications to both business and consumers. Moreover, PCI compliance is a costly undertaking.

The ClearTran Advantage

Sourcing these payment processing functions to us allows our clients to focus on their core businesses, while meeting PCI requirements, without the time and expense that would otherwise be required. ClearTran's Payment Processing Technology meets the industry's highest standard for protecting the confidential data of individuals who make purchases using our processes. Achieving PCI DSS validation further distinguishes ClearTran as one of the industry's premier electronic and online bill payment solution providers.
