BNY Mellon Treasury Services Helps Drive Payment Technology Change: Watch the Video

BNY Mellon Treasury Services payment and technology experts recently gathered to discuss our payment technology advances that are being designed to help organizations understand the potential opportunities that new developments in this space can offer businesses and their customers, and potential impacts to their strategies, work flows and bottom lines.

You can view the video of this discussion on bnymellon.com to learn how BNY Mellon is taking a leading industry role in preparing our payment infrastructure to support the creation of the payment ecosystem of the future, which is moving toward:

- radically improving payment processing toward real-time or near-real time;
- standardizing transparency of payment cost and funds receipt;
- reducing execution risk; and
- improving client experience via improved payment system usage that is fast, easy and at reasonable cost.

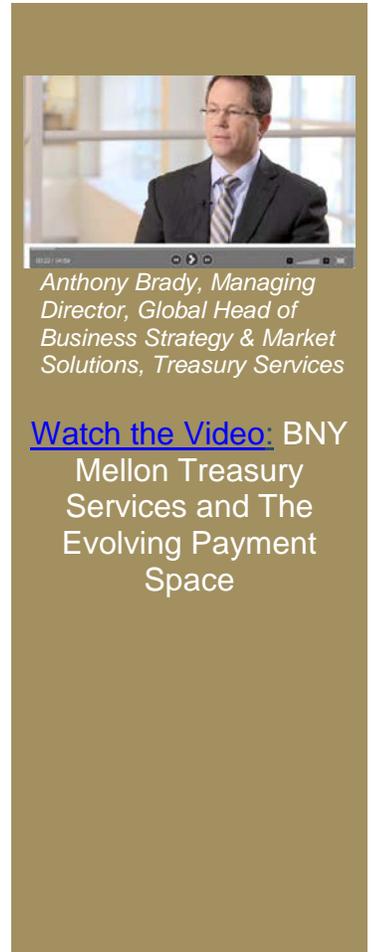

The video reviews how our efforts toward these goals, including work on a new global payment hub designed to enable consistent payment operations through key financial centers across the globe, are designed to enable global real-time payment. We are working with our clients, industry groups and financial technology (or “fintech”) firms to prepare for these future advances.

The video features Anthony Brady, Managing Director, Global Head of Business Strategy & Market Solutions, BNY Mellon Treasury Services; Sandra Alexander, Senior Business Analyst, Investment Services Technology; Carl Slabicki Senior Product Manager, USD Clearing Product Management, BNY Mellon Treasury Services; and Vera Struchkouskaya of BNY Mellon’s FX Product Management and Client Service Delivery group.
