At BNY Mellon, our visionary founder, Alexander Hamilton, left us an important legacy, that one person can make a difference. Each of us has the power to improve lives through investing, and we're invested in diverse, dynamic employees who can turn the world's complexity into opportunities for our clients and communities.

How are we invested today?

We are building one of the industry's most diverse corporate leadership teams, advancing a global culture of inclusion.

We are empowering all employees to be leaders and helping our people reach their full potential. That's why we delivered nearly 1 million learning hours in 2016.

Our global wellbeing program that nurtures an employee's whole being - physical, financial, social and emotional. We completed more than 30,000 wellbeing assessments in 2016.

Our employees are our greatest assets, and we continue to look for ways to promote happier, healthier and more productive employees, families and communities.
