

THEN AND NOW

October 2016

This is Alexander Hamilton, a U.S. founding father. Also founding father of the U.S. financial system and The Bank of New York, known today as BNY Mellon.

As one of the nation's first banks, we've grown from a house near Wall Street to operations in 35 countries, across 100 markets.

We've gone from providing the first loan to the U.S. government in 1789 to serving 80 percent of the Fortune 500 today.

In 1792, we were the first stock traded on the New York stock market. And centuries later, the first to create a mobile trading app.

We were one of the first national banks to use computers. And today, our innovation centers help us explore new technology.

From day one, we've consistently moved the industry forward. And with Hamilton's spirit as our inspiration, we continue to improve lives through investing.
